Diacritic	Khmer name	Function
◌̎	និក្ខហិត nĭkkôhēt	The Pali niggahīta , related to the anusvara. A small circle written over a consonant or a following dependent vowel, it nasalizes the inherent or dependent vowel, with the addition of [m]; long vowels are also shortened. For details see Modification by diacritics.
◌̍	រះមុខ reăhmŭkh	Related to the visarga. A pair of small circles written after a consonant or a following dependent vowel, it modifies and adds final aspiration /h/ to the inherent or dependent vowel. For details see Modification by diacritics.
◌̈ː	យុគលពិន្ទុ yŭkôleăkpĭntŭ	A "pair of dots", a fairly recently introduced diacritic, written after a consonant to indicate that it is to be followed by a short vowel and a glottal stop. See Modification by diacritics.
◌̊	មូសិកទន្ត musěkātōnd	Two short vertical lines, written above a consonant, used to convert some o-series consonants (ង ញ ម ឃ វ រ) to a-series. It is also used with ប bā to convert it to a p sound (see Supplementary consonants).
◌̄	ត្រីសព្វ treisâpt	A wavy line, written above a consonant, used to convert some a-series consonants (ស ហ ប អ) to o-series.
◌̅	កៀសក្រោម kbiêh kraôm	Also known as បុកជើង bŏckcheung ("collision foot"); a vertical line written under a consonant, used in place of the diacritics treisâpt and musěkātōnd when they would be impeded by superscript vowels.
◌̇	បន្តក់ bântăk	A small vertical line written over the last consonant of a syllable, indicating shortening (and corresponding change in quality) of certain vowels. See Modification by diacritics.
◌̆	របាទ rôbat	This superscript diacritic occurs in Sanskrit loanwords and corresponds to the Devanagari diacritic repha . It originally represented an r sound (and is romanized as r in the UN system). Now, in most cases, the consonant above which it appears, and the diacritic itself, are unpronounced. Examples: ធម៌ /ʰoː/ ("dharma"), ការណ៍ /kaː/ (from karṇa), ស្វគីរ /suəkie ~ suēkie/ ("Svarga").
◌̈́	ទណ្ឌឃាដ tôndâkhéat	Written over a final consonant to indicate that it is unpronounced. (Such unpronounced letters are still romanized in the UN system.)
◌̉+	កាកបាទ kakâbat	Also known as a "crow's foot", used in writing to indicate the rising intonation of an exclamation or interjection; often placed on particles such as /na/, /nɑː/, /nɛː/, /vəj/, and on ប៉ា៖ /caːh/, a word for "yes" used by females.
◌̋	អស្តា âsda	Used in a few words to show that a consonant with no dependent vowel is to be pronounced with its inherent vowel, rather than as a final consonant.
◌̣	សំយោគសញ្ញា sanhyoŭk sannha	Used in some Sanskrit and Pali loanwords (although alternative spellings usually exist); it is written above a consonant to indicate that the syllable contains a particular short vowel; see Modification by diacritics.
◌̏	វិរាម vîréam	A mostly obsolete diacritic, corresponding to the virama, which suppresses a consonant's inherent vowel.
